PRIZE DRAWING
Sunday, Sept 2 at 12 noon

History of Massey Ferguson

1847 – Daniel Massey begins manufacturing sample farm implements

1855 – Company begins rapid growth with innovations such as the Ketchum grass mower and Massey combined hand rake reaper mower

1867 – Company’s advances in harvesting equipment were chosen for display at the International Industrial Exhibition in Paris, France

1891 – Canada’s top two farm equipment companies merge to form Massey-Harris Limited

1926 – Harry Ferguson patents the 3-point hitch

1930 – Massey-Harris produces the General Purpose (GP) which was the first tractor designed and built by Massey-Harris

1938 – In Canada, Massey-Harris perfects the first self-propelled combine with its own engine and power train

1942 – Massey-Harris manufactures tanks, howitzers, naval gun mounts, etc. for WWII

1946 – Harry Ferguson opens the Banner Lane plant in England, which becomes the largest factor devoted solely to tractor production

1953 – Massey-Harris and Ferguson merge

1969 – Introduction of the first 4-wheel drive tractors, MF1500 and MF1800, powered by a Caterpillar V8 diesel engine

1969 – MF1150 is also introduced as the first V8-powered, fixed frame row crop tractor

1978 – The company’s first compact tractor is released, the Massey Ferguson 205. Massey Ferguson also pioneers the electronic 3-point hitch

1983 – The “Equipment Manufacturers Institute” recognizes the Massey Ferguson self-propelled combine as one of the “100 Most Significant Contributions” to the mechanization of agriculture.

1992 – Massey Ferguson combines offer optional yield meters operating in sync with the Global Positioning System, making it possible to map yields while harvesting

1996 – Massey Ferguson introduces the Dyna-6 transmission. Developed in Germany, it becomes the forerunner of today’s Dyna-VT- the most advanced Continuously Variable Transmission available and the world’s only clutchless, stepless, CVT

1997 – The 8780 Class VI rotary combine is released, designed to satisfy the increasing demand for high performing, mechanically simple, reliable machines

2006 – Massey Ferguson and Hesston join forces to produce the new Hesston Series complete line of hay equipment

2009 – The company’s new Dynamic Tractor Management

(DTM) system is introduced, allowing the engine and transmission to work as one by monitoring engine and transmission ratios to achieve optimum match for any given task

2010 – Massey Ferguson introduces the model 9250 DynaFlex combine. It features the industry’s first draper header with fully flexible cutterbar, delivering increased performance and capacity in soybeans and small grains

2011 – Massey Ferguson brings the new 7600 Series mid-frame row crop tractors to market. They have higher horsepower, new cab operations, and advances in efficiency and productivity
